

Husbands' Wage Premium/Penalties, Wives' Labour Force Participation, and Religion

These articles are based on the analysis of confidential data from the 2001 Canadian census and identify religion as an important factor when considering how wives' labour market participation acts as a premium or penalty on their husbands' wages. Advanced statistical techniques such as instrumental variables and propensity score matching are used in dealing with endogeneity.