

THE RELIGION AND DIVERSITY PROJECT/RELIGION ET DIVERSITÉ

Samaneh Hemat
PhD, Osgoode Hall Law School
SamanehHemat@osgoode.yorku.ca

Bio and Research Statement

Samane Hemmat is a PhD candidate studying religious freedom and international development policy at Osgoode Hall Law School. Her research areas include international religious freedom programming, extractive industry, and infrastructure project impacts on indigenous and community land drawing from the fields of development policy and international relations. She has a Masters in Public International Law from Georgetown University and worked as a Research Analyst at the Social Development Unit of the World Bank in India before beginning her PhD at Osgoode.